About University School of Mass Communication

VISION

As a premier media institute, USMC strives to nurture media researchers and professionals who may contribute holistically to society and set global standards for media education, research, extension and training in the area.

MISSION

- To evolve inclusion and innovative pedagogies to widen the knowledge domain.
- To equip and train students for emerging challenges in the professional domain.
- To evolve as a hub of excellence in quality teaching and socially relevant research.

About the Programme

The purpose of the Capacity Building Program on Academic Research Excellence for Young Faculty Members and Early Career Researchers in Social Sciences is to empower and improve the research capabilities of early-career academics in the field. This program aspires to equip young faculty fellows with the skills and ability to excel in academic research and contribute enormously to the social sciences.

Young faculty members in the social sciences who participate in this comprehensive capacity-building program will be better equipped to pursue rigorous research projects, publish their work in reputable journals, and make significant contributions to the advancement of knowledge in their respective disciplines analysis. In addition, this program will facilitate the development of a thriving academic community, fostering collaboration and enhancing the quality of social science research.

Key Components of the program includes

- 1. Research Methodology Sessions: Concentrating on quantitative and qualitative research methods and other research methodologies commonly used in the social sciences. Participants will learn to identify appropriate research design, acquire and analyze data, and interpret results.
- 2. Research Ethics and Integrity: These discussions focus on critical aspects of research ethics and integrity, emphasizing the importance of conducting research responsibly and adhering to unwavering principles of academic integrity, thereby avoiding plagiarism or research misconduct.
- 3. Publication and Writing Skills: Sessions devoted to enhancing academic writing abilities, manuscript preparation, and the publication procedure. Young faculty members will receive guidance on the structure of research papers, the composition of persuasive abstracts, and the publication submission process.
- 4. Data Interpretation and Analysis: Instruction in data interpretation techniques and statistical analysis software frequently used in social science research. Participants will develop proficiency in manipulating and analyzing research data to derive insightful conclusions.
- 5. Networking and Collaboration: Opportunities for participants to network with established researchers within and beyond their institution, fostering potential research collaborations and knowledge transfer.
